

Backups

Here at Dolphin we are firm believers in prevention over cure which is why we advocate having security and backup procedures in place for everybody that uses a computer. A great many of our regular customers use our fantastic backup service already and the feedback we've had from this service is overwhelmingly positive.

It's tempting to go for the "free" services that are offered out there but there is good reason why paying just a little more for security and backups is worth it – in short, you're better covered.

If you don't have a backup in place then you will, at some stage, lose your data.

"Data" is a pretty bland and sterile term, so let's talk a little about what we mean by your data:

Photos:

Your holiday snaps, your family, your pets – all of those images you have on your computer, laptop, iPad, phone – these are all data: how would you feel if you lost the lot?

Emails:

Even if you're one of those super-efficient types who maintains "inbox zero" you still have all of your email address and contact details on your computer. How easy would it be to track every single one of them down again if you lost access to your email accounts?

Downloads:

Your movies, your music, your bookmarked pages, all potentially gone. How long would it take to start all over again?

Documents:

If you can spare just five minutes, have a look at everything that you have on your computer. Pieces of writing, letters, poetry, college work, work work – again, what would it take to replace it all. Indeed, would it be possible to replace it all?

We use a backup system on all of our connected devices – our desktops, laptops, phones and tablets. This is not just because we are a computer firm, it's because we see the devastation caused to people when their computers fail or get stolen or damaged in some other way.
